RANDLOPH

Milk Bottling Works to Be Protected From Fire.

Chief Engineer Ned C. Buck made a careful measurement of the distance from the last hydrant to the White Cross milk bottling plant on Tuesday when it was found that the distance was 1,400 feet, which practically left the property without fire protection. At a village meeting held some two months ago it was voted to extend the corporation limits sufficiently to take this property in, consequently the fire protection will no doubt be extended in the near future.

EAST MONTPELIER.

Mrs. Tracy was born in Worcester and moved to Middlesex when very young and there spent her girlhood. She later came to Montpelier and worked as a tailoress for some of the leading firms such as the Ricker Co. and Woolson Bros., and before coming to Montpelier was employed by one of the leading tailoring establishments in Worcester, Mass., for about two years. Her first husband was William Cummings and after her marriage to him she lived on the George Lawrence farm until the death of Mr. Cummings. Twenty-eight years ago next October she married Mr. Tracy and they moved to East Montpelier and resided on the farm, she being Mr. Tracy's second wife. Mrs. Tracy was 75 years of age and was well preserved for her years. She was the daughter of Jesse and Fanny Flint. Mrs. Tracy had two sisters and four brothers, Jessie, Almonzo, Joseph, Fannie, Prentice, and John D., all dead except John D. ## A Museless Effusion.

I might write a ballad on hot lobster salad
Or on my or scissors or soap.
I might do a ditty on life in the city
Or why do little manicures moan.
I might sing of preachers, of pirates,
Or teachers,
Or actors who burgled for pay,
Or else I might chant of some lad
Some one's aunt or
But none of these suit me today.
I'll not sing of Dickens or Shelley or chickens—
For how in the world would I dast!
I'll sing of naught present, though that would be pleasant.
Nor ought that is future or past.
I'll sing of no topics that come from
the tropics,
Or wherever else we find beauty:
Of none of these matters today, Musey
chatters—
But just of a grim sense of duty.
—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Barre People Give Credit Where Credit Is Due.

People of Barre who suffer with sick kidneys and had backs want a kidney remedy that can be depended upon. The best is Doan's Kidney Pills, a medicine for the kidneys only, made from pure roots and herbs, and the only one that is backed by cures in Barre. Here's Barre testimony:
O. A. Churchill, contractor and builder, of 35 Merchant street, Barre, Vt., says: "I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, which I procured from E. A. Brown, druggist, through our Barre newspapers in a statement given eight years ago. I used them at that time and was so greatly benefited that I continued taking them until the symptoms of kidney complaint and weakness of the back and loins disappeared. I have on several occasions used Doan's Kidney Pills since then and always with the same good results. They are certainly worthy of endorsement and I have advised many friends and acquaintances to use them."

DEDICATION ON JUNE 25.

Of The Hale Monument Erected in Cemetery Near Lake Caspian.

The Hale monument at Greensboro is to be dedicated appropriately June 25, at the monument (in the little cemetery west of Lake Caspian) if the day is pleasant, at ten o'clock, a. m.; otherwise most of the exercises will be at the Congregational church.

The above date is the centennial of the beginning of Sunday school work in Vermont, though the first regularly organized Sunday school was at Concord Corner in 1811 or 1812, the idea having evidently been derived from Dea. Washburn by the pastor who had been at Greensboro as a missionary a little before. In 1808 Dea. Washburn began to teach his large family on Sunday evenings, as a class (so says the church record,) though he testified that until several years later he had never heard of such a thing as a Sunday school.

Before many years his class became popular, and he was compelled by numbers to go to the school house.

June 25th, 1814, they there organized with superintendent and five teachers. June 25th, 1817, they held an "exhibition" as they of the "Moral society of Greensboro, Craftsbury and Hardwick" named it, over 400 children marching to music from the school house to Ego, Hale's barn, and the ministry of all the region, as far away as Montpelier being present.

Eq. Hale was a good man, almost the leader of everything good in the town, and superintendent of the said Sunday school for long years. He left a legal paper on record, providing for a suitable monument at his grave, but when Rev. P. B. Hale became pastor there, he discovered that not even a rough stone had marked the spot, and not many were living who could certainly identify it. He found some of the hard-wood frame of the old Hale barn laid up by the late Mr. Keniston, and marked plainly, "From the old S. S. B. Hale became pastor here, making it up into cane-sticks and nicknacks, and making it the nucleus of a fund for the monument, and with a few generous private and public gifts, he has accomplished his task, and the whole interesting story is to be told at the monument. A brochure of all the data, probably with several photos, is also to be published.

Spoiling a Bachelor
[Original.]
When Angelica was seventeen her parents married her to Eschell Ballou, aged sixty-five and seven times a millionaire. Seven years later Ballou died and left a widow without children, but with $10,000,000.

Now commenced Angelica's real life. She was old enough not to need a chaperon, yet young enough to enjoy the prominence given her by her wealth, a beauty that was in its prime and great sprightliness. She at once became the favorite of society and lived in some of her several residences in town and country. Men flocked to her in untold numbers, but what is easily gained is not valued, and she would have none of them. Several of her suitors were men of prominence who could have advanced the young widow in a way not to be attained by wealth alone, but the trouble was they were to be had for the asking. There was no sport in a chase where a hundred hunters were firing at her on sight. She preferred to turn huntress and bring down the game herself.

Among the young men of her acquaintance was Paul Debonair, whose father had died and left his son several hundred thousand dollars. Paul spent all the income, but resolutely refrained from touching a cent of his principal. Pleasure was his object. More money than he had he would not have valued. He had enough to give him what he wanted and not enough to bother him by attending to it. He would never marry. In short, he was determined to get the most out of life in the way that seemed most desirable to him—that is, as a man of the world. One evening he went to a ball. Angelica was there, surrounded by a crowd of men elbowing one another to get near her. If she moved from one room to another, within a few minutes every one of those men was to be found in the room to which she had gone. If she went back, they went back. Paul Debonair looked at this spectacle with disgust. He danced in the same set with Angelica, but every time it became his part to take her hand to swing he would pretend to have made a mistake and swing some one else.

"Great heavens, Paul," said one of his friends, "do you know whom you are snubbing? That's the young Widow Ballou, worth millions."
"I don't care if she is the Widow Croesus," said Paul in a tone loud enough to be heard by the widow herself, "and worth billions."

Paul Debonair had sounded the death-knell to his independence. Angelica sent one of her circle of attendants to bring him to her and introduce him. He consented, but if his object was to avoid rudeness he might as well have declined, for his brusqueness and indifference were unpardonable. Angelica had noticed while he danced that Torsichore was one of his idols. He abandoned himself to the motion and the music as one in a heavenly dream. Quick to see a weak point, she resolved to attack him through this love. She asked him to dance. He had the effrontery to decline on the ground that he did not know how to dance.

But it was not long after this that Angelica gave a ball herself. She had given out through her friends that she felt very much hurt at the treatment Debonair had given her, that she had been surprised that any man should treat an unprotected woman so rudely, but that she would give him an opportunity to redeem himself. These remarks were intended for Paul's ears, and when he received an invitation to her ball he decided at least to accept it.

There being no orchestra at hand capable of playing dance music as Angelica wished it played, she imported one, and when Paul entered the ballroom he heard voluptuous sounds that tingled in the tips of his toes. He went directly to the hostess, who smiled upon him and said:

"I have been saving my first dance for you, Mr. Debonair. I am hostess here, and my word is law. You are commanded to dance with me."
In another moment Debonair was
